Goshen Revisited

by Jack and Judy Witt

In this second book on Goshen Pass, Jack and Judy Witt combine forces again to revel in this land along Virginia's Maury River. In their poignant personal essays, poetry and art, they capture and share their joy and inspiration while climbing and exploring the Pass. Full-color images of Judy's watercolors and Jack's bronze sculpture transport the reader to their favorite haunts by the waterside, playing on light and fantasy, color and texture. Goshen comes alive and speaks to the reader in these beautiful pages.

About the Authors

Judy Witt is a watercolorist and writer, and her husband, Jack Witt, a poet and sculptor. Their books, The Sylvan, written and illustrated with Judy's mystical watercolor images, and Jack's collection of poems, Roses Are Red... and White have already drawn a devoted readership.

Jack Witt earned a B.A. in English from Virginia Military Institute. He received classical training in painting and drawing as an apprentice under Eugene Califano in Taos, New Mexico. He later enrolled in Virginia Commonwealth University where he earned his M.F.A. in sculpture. For nearly thirty-five years, he has worked in three-dimensional art, and many of his exhibitions have appeared throughout Virginia and Maryland. He is also the creator of the Bill "Bojangles" Robinson monument in Richmond, Virginia; "Mr. Smedly," in Richmond, Virginia; "Lincoln," at Lincoln Memorial University, Harrogate, Tennessee; and an additional number of pieces in private and public collections.

Judy Witt graduated with a B.A. in Education from Longwood College, Farmville, Virginia, and did graduate work at Old Dominion University. She coauthored The Center Ring, a book about therapeutic clowning and the philosophy of the Fool, published in 1992. She works primarily in watercolor, a medium that captures the charm of her complex and ethereal designs. Judy's work has appeared in numerous exhibitions, including one man shows, throughout Virginia, and in California. Her work is part of a number of permanent collections, both public and private.
